Preventing Colds.

(New York World.)

A few simple precautions will do much to prevent colds and the debilitation of being cold. All colds are a form of congestion. The blood is driven away from a chilled surface of the body and into the chest and other organs, causing a chill and other signs of congestion give warning when too late.

Wild animals do not take cold. If these same animals were part of the time confined in a warm room and then crossed to cold blasts of air they would soon die. Men constantly expose themselves to changes in temperature and humidity that no other animals could stand.

The easy remedy is to prevent these changes from affecting the circulation and bodily temperature. A man's body is a furnace. Clothing does not warm him, but only checks the radiation of bodily heat. The warmth comes from the burning of the oxygen of the air in his lungs. Exercise warms the man because his lungs burn up more oxygen. The oxygen in combination with the air, simulated food burns freely. It is as much fuel as coal or wood.

The process that goes on in the lungs is similar to that in a stove. The more draught the better. Give your lungs more draught and you will feel warmer immediately. Ten long, deep breaths on coming out of the house in the morning will make the outdoor temperature seem twenty degrees warmer. Long deep breaths every time you get out from a warm room to the open air will send the blood tingling to the surface of the skin and at the same time the more exhilarating the sensation. Try it.

Nature has put in every man's chest a furnace that beats steam heat.
